

THE GW CENTER OF EXCELLENCE IN MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH

AT THE

MILKEN INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

"Our location in Washington, DC gives our students proximity and access to federal and local agencies and nonprofit organizations leading the way in maternal and child health."

- Amita Vyas, PhD, MCH Program and Center Director

Our world-class faculty are providing educational and research opportunities to students through their global and domestic work in areas including maternal health; women's and adolescent health; reproductive health; obesity; mental health; and violence against women.

You could be eligible to receive a scholarship through the center.

- We are 1 of 13 MCH Centers of Excellence programs across the country, all working to ensure our country has a strong pipeline of professional and academic talent to serve the health needs of women, children, youth, and families.
- We are, however, the only center in the country with policy as one of our foundational pillars.
- We are building the future by educating the next generation of public health professionals who will work to ensure that women are healthy before, during, and after pregnancy, and address the physical and mental health needs of women and girls across their lifespan.
- What does the center mean for our program?
 - More opportunities to develop on-the-job experience.
 - Specialized training in MCH policy/advocacy
 - Specialized training in human-centered design
 - Opportunities to apply for practice and research fellowship awards
 - Our Student Network (GWMCHSN) that connects you with your MCH peers and alumni from GW and across the country
